

ABOUT JASON

Jason Gallion is a farmer, a family man, and a man of faith dedicated to public service. His successful career in agriculture and leadership experience within the volunteer fire service and other local groups reflect Jason's deep knowledge and strong relationships within these communities, his effective organizational skills and high ethical standards.

Jason attended Harford County public schools and Harford Community College, culminating in a degree in political science. He joined the Level Volunteer Fire Company, holding numerous elected offices during that time including Chief and President. After college Jason started his own small business, Hopewell Farm, where he manages a beef cow herd and hay sales operation. He is also the Agricultural Specialist with Harford County Government where he works to support and promote the agricultural community. Jason is married to Sonya Eagleston Gallion, a former math and special education teacher, and they live on a farm in the Level community with their three daughters, Marie, Eliza, and Helen.
